A Bibliography of Illinois Poets since 1900 was begun in the belief that it is important to understand the many sections which form our country. Such an understanding not only strengthens the individual sections or communities through a knowledge of themselves but also enriches and unifies the people of the nation. It was hoped that just as the W. P. A. Guide Book Series had quickened the people's interest in their country and given them pride in the best things American by calling attention to the characteristic features of various localities, so bibliographies such as this one might make the nation aware of a similar individuality of thought, which forms the texture of American life in its spiritual aspects.

In making a bibliography such as this one on Illinois poets, the first problem--and that no easy one--was to determine what poets might be regarded as belonging to Illinois. Perhaps we are not too wide the mark when we regard any poet born and brought up in the state, or one who spent a good number of years--fifteen or more--in the state, or one who did most of his creative work in Illinois, as an Illinois poet. It is true that occasionally a poet may have contributed sufficiently to the life and thought of several states to be claimed by more than one state; but such instances will not be frequent. Usually the right to classify a poet as an Illinoisan was based on available biographical data, but sometimes poets for whom such data were not available who appeared in such works as Illinois Poets (New York, Henry Harrison Publishing Company, 1935) or who were listed as Illinoisans by Who's Who among North American Authors (Los Angeles, Golden Syndicate Publishing Company) were accepted. Biographical information concerning others, especially young poets, was secured from oral sources.

Since the purpose of the work was to present a picture of the thought of a community as it appeared in its poetry, not only the better known, and, perhaps, more excellent poets, were included here, but also those little known. Any poet who has published a volume of poetry, or a few poems in periodicals should have a place in this bibliography. Occasionally, however, persons known to be poets were omitted because reference to their works did not appear in any of the usual indexes nor in the library catalogues of Chicago.

In gathering the material for this bibliography not only were the usual book and periodical indexes used, but also special indexes and bibliographies for individual poets. When a citation given by a particular bibliography was not complete, complete bibliographical information was sought in the book or periodical in which the poem or article appeared. Frequently, however, poets published in ephemeral periodicals, which were not available in Chicago. Occasionally the entries under individual authors are incomplete because there was no way to determine whether a particular book was poetry or not. Furthermore, drama cast in poetic form was omitted, if the drama was meant to be acted.

Ordinarily the listings of titles in A Bibliography of Illinois Poets since 1900 have been divided into three sections: 1) collected poems, 2) single poems, that is, those appearing in periodicals or outside collected works, and 3) articles or books about the author's life and works. A title of a poem is not usually given under "Single Poems" if the poem occurs in a volume of the author's poetry; but sometimes the volumes of the less well-known poets were not to be found in Chicago libraries and hence poems occurring in the collections may be listed under "Single Poems."

Usually the first edition of a work is the one given in the bibliography. References to reviews easily accessible in the Book Review Digest were omitted. For convenience, shortened forms of a few titles were used; for example, the title, Poetry, a Magazine of Verse, was shortened to Poetry; The Chicago Evening Post to Chicago Post. Sometimes names of publishing houses were shortened and locations of such houses omitted for a few well-known publishers. In citing the column and page for newspapers, the column has been given first and the page number second, so 3/8.

Two features of this work, perhaps, deserve special mention. Through this bibliography the works of many poets, especially the young poets, who have not received the attention of the bibliographers, have become available to the public. Furthermore even for those poets for whom bibliographies already exist, additional titles of single poems have been added here.

It is with pleasure that we acknowledge the assistance of a number of agencies and people. The University of Chicago generously granted us the use of their library. Miss Winifred Ver Nooy and Miss Katherine Hall, reference librarians there, were helpful in numerous indescribable ways. Mrs. Judith Bond kindly allowed us almost constant use of the Modern Poetry Room at the University of Chicago. Likewise, the Chicago Public Library, the Newberry Library, and the John Crerar Library gave us the privilege of using their facilities. Especially do we owe thanks to Chicago Teachers College for furnishing us with a room for our headquarters, and to Mr. Robert Wilkins, librarian of the college who acted as the co-sponsor's representative for the project.
